Indents, as the term is used in this volume, were interest-bearing certificates issued after the Revolutionary War by the South Carolina Treasury in payment of a relatively small number of claims outstanding on May 12, 1780, when Charleston fell into the hands of the British, and of those (involving a far greater number of persons and a much larger sum of money) which were contracted in the course of the ensuing struggle to halt the march of the occupation forces and then to liberate the state. On each stub remaining in the Treasurer's books after the indent was detached there was entered the name of the recipient, the service rendered, and the amount paid. These entries on the stubs are, in other words, summaries of thousands of individual debts, accounts of which had been received, audited, and approved.

Both the Stub Indent Books and the Audited Accounts are now preserved, largely intact, in the South Carolina Archives Department. Together they present a remarkable record of a state which was affected by every phase of the War for

PREFACE

7093893

After the fall of Charles Town in 1780, South Carolina faced the problem of carrying on the Revolution while almost entirely occupied by the enemy. With virtually no machinery of government she had to keep an army in the field and supplied. To meet these needs a remarkable system of credit was used. In return for military duty or supplies furnished the state, receipts were given with a promise to pay when conditions were more stable. After the war these receipts were turned in to the Auditor General's Office where the accounts were audited. This voluminous collection called the Accounts Audited of Revolutionary Claims against South Carolina is in the South Carolina Archives. The Accounts Audited furnish, in many cases, the only proof of Revolutionary service by an individual, as well as a wealth of information on various aspects of the Revolutionary War in South Carolina. Beginning on March 22, 1783, interest-bearing certificates called indents were issued in payment of these accounts. Stubs were kept which gave a summary of the information contained in the indent. This included the name of the receiver, the date the indent was issued, the amount of the principal and interest, and a description of the service rendered.

There are twenty-five books of Stub Entries bearing a single letter of the alphabet (the letter J was not used) and four books of special indents called AA, FEC, CI, and RP. Mr. A. S. Salley edited Books B, I, and L through Z, and these were published in nine volumes by the Historical Commission (now the Archives Department). The series is to be completed now by publishing books A, C through H, K, and the four books of special indents. In general the same editorial policy will be followed so that these last volumes will conform as nearly as possible to those already published.

The only innovation that will appear in the new volumes is the inclusion of such information as may be found in the Accounts Audited in those cases in which the Stub Entry is missing. In order to supply the information the editor has consulted a contemporary general index to Stub Entries which gives the name of the person receiving the indent, the number of the indent, and the letter of the book from which it was issued. By this means most of the accounts were located and, in a number of instances, these were found to contain the canceled indent. The Stub Entries which have been reconstructed from the Accounts have been marked by an asterisk (*), those copied from the indents by a dagger (†), and those for which no Accounts Audited could be found by a double dagger (‡).

The two books in this volume were copied under the direction of Mr. Salley, but had not been published. Book G was copied by Miss Mary Belle Crawford and Book H by Miss Harriet J. Clarkson. Miss Ruth S. Green helped in the preparation of the index. The editor wishes particularly to thank Dr. J. H. Easterby for his encouragement and guidance in this project. The other books of Stub Entries are in process of publication. An introduction to the series will furnish a more complete discussion of the indents in relation to the larger scope of Revolutionary and early national history.

American Independence. They reveal much as to how the troops of the resistance were recruited and supplied, of the exercise of power while the civil authority was largely in abeyance, of the fiscal policy of the government after its restoration, and of the activities of hundreds of men whose military service is not recorded elsewhere.

The greater number of the Stub Indent Books have been published under the direction of Mr. A. S. Salley, former State Historian (see list on back of jacket). With the present volume, containing Books G and H, the Archives Department resumes the publication of this series, which it is estimated will require five additional volumes to complete.

Three volumes of the Accounts Audited (see list on back of jacket), also edited by Mr. Salley, have been issued by the Archives Department. These unquestionably contain information which supplements that in the stub entries, but the number of documents in this collection (approximately 60,000) makes it doubtful that the printing of this series can be completed.
